INTRODUCTION

In today's modern society, the study of the social activity of young people from a philosophical point of view remains relevant. The social activity of young people as an important substantive basis of social activity is important in the development of social life of society on a stable basis, the self-organization of Social being, the maturation of values and traditions related to progress into evolution. Youth social activism has a direct positive impact on reforms taking place in the social, economic and cultural sphere in the state.

Youth innovation activity is in harmony with the principles of the national interests of the country and the practice of reform, promotes the improvement of the living well-being of the population, a high level of lifestyle, the emergence in practice of programs and efforts made by the authorities in this regard. Also, the manifestation of social and innovative activities of young people in the neighborhood area is manifested as a mechanism that carries out specific social control to increase the responsibility of management entities involved in solving the social problems of the population in the area and their timely implementation of measures.

An analysis of the social and innovative activity of young people shows that they are activities that contribute to the general and joint activities of society and the state. This makes it possible for young people to be benevolent towards social activities and to pursue their common interests. It is an important practice that the vital needs of our people are constantly and consistently manifested in practice in the development of innovative projects that serve to further promote the well-being of our people, participation in the creation of programs of measures designed to solve social problems. It is advisable for young people to cooperate with the public in their participation in these processes, to learn the existing experiences in them and to introduce these skills in practical innovative activities.

Also, the constant participation of young people with their proposals in the discussion of each strategically important document, which is solved on a state scale, expands their creative and entrepreneurial activity for the future of society. Young people actively participate in the discussion of laws, under-law and software documents to promote the development of directions that are important for the state and our society to timely eliminate the most important social, economic, political and spiritual problems.

Therefore, scientists note that " another way to dialectically harmonize material and spiritual production processes in ensuring that Independent National Social Development is growing to a new qualitative stage is to establish the harmonious development of innovations based on the introduction of them into the sphere of economy and spirituality. This method works through the means expressed in itself the dialectical features of the development of youth's labor activity on the basis of a harmonious organization with economy and spirituality"<sup>1</sup>.

The fact that young people increase their social and innovative activity also creates the ability to protect the interests of other social groups that exist in society. The increase in the general abilities of young people in innovating, that is, striving for innovations, is improving in connection with the increase in the worldview of intellectual potential, innovative thinking and creativity. A.Prigozhin notes that" one of the most basic characteristics of the subjects of innovation is the manifestation in thought of its perceived foundations associated with society, having certain opportunities on a subjective basis."

Therefore, it should be noted that it will be necessary to constantly direct the scientific potential of young people to the realization of creative traditions in society, to prepare them for socio-useful work. This activity places more responsibility on the Family, Educational Institutions, neighborhood and community. Young people are a social group who constantly change their decisions quickly, the various district is rich in interests. Therefore, ensuring the activity of young people in sustainable development, stimulating their efforts arising from the needs of society and the state, is an important reality in social relations.

The innovative activity of young people as a system is manifested in their relationship with the environment. Young people adapt to social relations in the appropriate order by collecting specific information from the environment and social being, mastering experiences, trying to participate in this process on their own by studying modern innovations that are manifested in society.
