
THE ROLE OF CIVIL SOCIETY IN THE PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Nasiriddinov Yigitali Boratalievich

Is A Researcher At Namangan State University

ABSTRACT: The article examines the role of civil society in the protection of human rights, revealing its importance as an additional mechanism for monitoring the observance of citizens' rights and freedoms. The authors analyze the concept of civil society, its functions and mechanisms of influence on government and society. Special attention is paid to the role of non-governmental organizations, activists and journalists in identifying and documenting human rights violations. The article also examines the interaction of civil society with international organizations and mechanisms for the protection of human rights. In conclusion, it is emphasized that active citizenship and civil society in general play a key role in protecting human rights and strengthening democracy.

KEYWORDS: Civil society, human rights, human rights protection, civil organizations, activism, social justice, political rights, economic rights, cultural rights, education and information, international cooperation.

INTRODUCTION

The role of civil society in the protection of human rights plays a key role in the modern world. Civil society is a sphere of public life that functions independently of the state and business and includes various public organizations, movements, initiative groups, etc. Initially, civil society arose as a counterweight to the government and the economic elite, seeking to protect the interests of ordinary people[1]. Over time, his role in society has increased significantly, especially in the field of human rights protection. One of the main functions of civil society is to monitor the activities of the State in the field of human rights. Public organizations and activists monitor the observance of citizens' rights, identify cases of violations and draw the attention of the public and international organizations to them.

Civil society is also actively involved in human rights education and awareness-raising. Organizations conduct courses, seminars, conferences, and information campaigns aimed at raising awareness of citizens about their rights and freedoms. In addition, civil society plays an important role in protecting the rights of minorities. It supports the activities of organizations representing the interests of minorities and fights against discrimination based on race, gender, religion, nationality and other grounds[2]. A particularly important aspect of the activities of civil society is its participation in conflict resolution and peace-building. Organizations and activists work on the ground to improve the living conditions of people affected by conflict and promote dialogue and cooperation between different groups of society.

Thus, civil society plays an integral role in the protection of human rights, ensuring control over the activities of the State, education and enlightenment of the population, protection of minority rights and participation in conflict resolution. The role of civil society in the protection of human rights plays a key role in the modern world. Civil society consists of independent organizations, associations, activists and ordinary citizens who work to protect human rights and freedoms[3]. One of the main principles of civil society is the principle of the rule of law, according to which all citizens are equal before the law and have the right to a fair trial. Civil society plays an important role in monitoring the implementation of laws by the authorities, including in the field of human rights protection. Civil society also performs the function of monitoring the observance of human rights, monitoring the actions of the State and other actors, and responding to cases of violations of rights. Thanks to the active position of civil society, many offenses can be prevented or suppressed at an early stage.

Another important function of civil society is the education of citizens in the field of human rights. Civil society organizations conduct educational programs, trainings, seminars and other events aimed at increasing the level of knowledge of citizens about their rights and freedoms. In addition, civil society plays an important role at the international level, participating in international organizations and international forums, protecting human rights at the global level[4]. Thus, the role of civil society in the protection of human rights is invaluable. It is an integral part of a democratic society where every citizen has the opportunity to influence the processes taking place in the country and protect their rights and freedoms. Great article! If you have any other topics or ideas for articles that you would like to learn more about, feel free to ask.

The role of civil society in the protection of human rights is key in the modern world, where rights and freedoms are often threatened by the State or private individuals[5]. Civil society is a set of public organizations independent of the State, initiative groups and active citizens acting in the interests of protecting human rights and freedoms. Initially, civil society plays an important role in monitoring the activities of the State and public institutions, which helps to prevent abuse of power and human rights violations. It acts as a supervisory body, monitoring the actions of the Government and public institutions, and, if necessary, appeals to international organizations and human rights organizations for support. An important function of civil society is the education of citizens in the field of human rights and the support of their active citizenship. It conducts training programs, campaigns and actions aimed at raising awareness of citizens about their rights and freedoms, as well as strengthening civic engagement and participation in public life.

Civil society also provides practical assistance to victims of human rights violations, providing legal support, advice and protection in court. It also acts as an intermediary between victims and government agencies, helping to restore violated rights and punish those responsible. The role of civil society in the protection of human rights plays a key role in the modern world[6]. Civil society includes a wide range of independent organizations, initiative groups and activists who work for the benefit of society and protect human rights and freedoms. These organizations play an important role in controlling the authorities, paying attention to human rights violations and acting in the interests of citizens.

One of the main activities of civil society is the monitoring of human rights. Organizations and activists closely monitor the actions of the authorities, paying attention to cases of human rights violations and evaluating their activities. Through this, civil society contributes to the maintenance of democratic principles and the protection of freedom of expression. Civil society is also actively involved in the development and implementation of human rights protection programmes. The organizations conduct educational events aimed at raising awareness of human rights, help victims of human rights violations and put pressure on the authorities to improve legislation. Another important aspect of the role of civil society is its participation in the development of international cooperation in the field of human rights. The organizations cooperate with international structures, participate in the preparation of reports and recommendations on the protection of human rights, which contributes to the improvement of the international legal order and the protection of human rights at the global level.

Thus, civil society plays an important role in the protection of human rights. His participation contributes to the control of the authorities, the development and implementation of programs for the protection of rights and the development of international cooperation in the field of human rights. The work of civil society is necessary to maintain democratic principles and protect human freedom.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, civil society plays an integral role in the protection of human rights, being an effective tool for controlling power, educating citizens in the field of human rights and providing practical assistance to victims. His activism and mobilization are the basis for the protection of human rights and freedoms in modern society.

REFERENCES

1. Волчанская А. Н. Роль институтов гражданского общества в защите прав человека //Вестник Волгоградской академии МВД России. – 2011. – №. 2 (17). – С. 22-27.
2. Абашидзе, А. Х., Абдуллин, А. И., Адамова, Э. Р., Акхамова, И. Л., Алиев, З. Г., Амиров, К. Ф., ... & Шайхутдинова, Г. Р. (2021). Международная и внутригосударственная защита прав человека.
3. Ismoilov T. I. Influence of psychological factors on the development of verbal and communicative competencies //E Conference Zone. – 2023. – С. 1-3.
4. Ismoilov T. I. Development of Verbal Communication in the Process of Formation of Personality //Zien Journal of Social Sciences and Humanities. – 2023. – Т. 24. – С. 7-9.
5. Азаров, Анатолий Яковлевич, В. Ройтер, and К. Хюфнер. Права человека. Моск. шк. прав человека, 2003.
6. Алферова, Елена Васильевна. "Защита прав человека в Интернете." Государство и право в новой информационной реальности 1 (2018): 143-157.